Classic Newspaper Headlines Reveal More About People Than The Press.

A newspaper headline is designed to grab your attention, sum up the story below it and entice you to read the body of the article. Over the years, good, bad, ridiculous and great headlines have become famous and infamous in their own right.

Occasionally a headline will jump off the page you're reading and grab you by the neck. Last week, amid all the warmongering between Russia, America and Europe over the impending invasion of Ukraine, the caption atop Thomas Friedman's column in The New York Times screamed: "Putin To Ukraine: Marry Me Or I'll Kill You."

Friedman's personalized take on the swaggering Russian bully forcing his much coveted neighbour into bed at gun point was so cleverly accurate and comprehensive, the reader almost didn't need to read the rest of his column.

A list of America's most iconic headlines of the past shows them to be brief as in "Nixon Resigns" (August 9th, 1974). Violent, as in "Assassin Kills Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson Sworn In" (November 22nd, 1963). Both brief and violent as in "Beatle John Lennon Slain" (December 9th, 1980).

While in Canada, a list of our most famous headlines, recently compiled by Reader's Digest, tend to be a tad on the light side. As in "Goat Arrested After Walking Into Saskatchewan Tim Hortons."

Some Canadian newspaper leads speak to the very heart of our heritage: "Three Men Sentenced For $18 Million Maple Syrup Heist." Some of our headlines are so quintessentially Canadian they make you want to cry. "Hockey Game Breaks Out After Massive Pileup On Quebec Highway." Cry... from laughter, that is.

At least one was so classically Canuck, it deserved a celebration: "Canadian Truck Explodes After Hitting Moose, Sets Off Fireworks Display."

Americans are drawn to headlines that are brutally direct — "Hitler Dead" (May 2nd, 1945). Or short and sweet like "The First Footstep" (July 21th, 1969) as Neil Armstrong touched down on the moon. And in that historical, hysterical moment when the first black man became president of the United States, just a single word: "OBAMA!" (The New York Times. November 5th, 2008)

Seldom does a headline give birth to a hit song. "4Dead, 10 Hurt At KSU" was the headline. Four Dead In O-Hi-O by Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young became the 1960s protest anthem against the Vietnam War.

By contrast, Canadians seem to be more comfortable with the black and white captions that relate to our most colourful pastimes. "Zamboni Driver Charged With Impaired Driving." Not to mention our trademark penchant for politeness — "Car Thief Returns Vehicle With A Full Tank Of Gas." (And no, I checked. That guy wan't even related to the "Ontario Thief Returns Stolen Goods, Leave $50 For Damages.")

Not to mention our trademark penchant for politeness. (What is there... an echo in here?) "Have A Good Day: B.C. Man Politely Asks Family Of Bears To Leave His Yard."

This is not to say that the American press cannot, on occasion be warm and personal: "Rubio Suggests Trump Has Small Genitals."

Or confusing: "One-Armed Man Applauds The Kindness Of Strangers." Or really, really confusing: "Infusion Partners with Anheuser-Busch To Accelerate Business Innovation Using Microsoft Hololens." (Seriously, take a digital firearm and put two bullets in the back of my computer.)

By using just her first name in the heading "Diana Is Dead", The New York Post showed Diana Frances Spencer not to be just a British royal but the Princess Of The Planet.

Some American leads bear a keen eye for the obvious as in "Federal Agents Raid Gun Shop, Find Weapons." And sometimes they're so obvious they do not require numerical statistics to prove the premise: "Study Shows Frequent Sex Enhances Pregnancy Chances."

In the United States a headline can conjure up a wonderful image like that of a half man/half dolphin pitching his way into major league baseball. "Amphibious Pitcher Makes Debut." (He taught himself how to throw the ball with either hand. No, no gills involved.)

In Canada a headline can be so frightening it discourages the reader to proceed to the actual story. This one from Newfoundland: "Shark Nearly Chokes To Death On Moose, Is Saved By Canadian Bystanders."

From British Columbia came the recurring theme of mangled meat: "Sister Hits Moose On Way To Visit Sister Who Hit Moose."

At least one great headline blurred the line of the 49th parallel. "Ford To City: Drop Dead." No, not Rob or Doug to Toronto but Gerald to New York City denying The Big Apple help during its bankruptcy crisis.

And finally that perfect headline that binds our two great nations together and not just honours our bilateral friendship but blesses both sides of our 5,525-mile undefended border. "Canadian Man Sorry For Chugging Eight Beers And Swimming To Detroit." The beauty of binge drinking succumbs to the lure of the America dream.

That guy's friend, the one who chugged nine beers but stayed behind on land? He swears he saw his buddy being chased across the Detroit River by a shark with a moose in its mouth.

Headlines — sometimes they're not 'Breaking News.' Sometimes it's just news that's broken.

Long-Time Espanola Area Conservation Officer Retires

His partner, Terry Lynn Johnson says it has been a busy three decades with him overseeing many Ministry of Natural Resources & Forestry programs and being out on the trails and waterways of Northern Ontario, doing the job he thoroughly enjoyed.

She says he especially enjoyed working with various local organizations such as the Espanola Game and Fish Club, the annual deer checks, educational seminars shared with communities throughout the North Shore corridor and teaching kids about conservation.

She adds he won't be going too far, but there might be some fishing and maybe a little hunting on his horizon soon.

Ontario PC Announce Candidate For Algoma-Manitoulin Riding

The Ontario PC Party Cheryl Fort of Hornepayne has been nominated as the party candidate for Algoma-Manitoulin ahead of the next provincial election. Fort was first elected in 2016 as town Councillor and was elected as Mayor of the Township of Hornepayne in 2018, becoming the second female Indigenous Mayor to be elected in Ontario.

She is also a Locomotive engineer for the Canadian National Railway and serves as a Northern Zone Director for the Ontario Good Roads Association.

Fort says having served as mayor and being active within the community, she understands what issues matter most and looks forward to addressing them at Queen's Park.

Fort is running against incumbent, New Democrat Michael Mantha, and Liberal candidate Timothy Vine in the provincial election set for Thursday, June 2nd.

Cambrian College Climbs Rankings Of Canada's Research College

Photo: Cambrian College's R&D Team in one of the research labs at the main campus in Sudbury, Ontario. In the latest national rankings, placed 18th in Canada for research activity among colleges, its highest ranking ever. Photo provided by Cambrian College and used with permission.

Cambrian College achieved its best year ever in applied research. Cambrian Director Mike Commito says for the 10th year in a row, Cambrian has made the list of Canada's top 50 research colleges, according to ReSearch Infosource, which ranks colleges according to research activity and funding.

He adds in the latest rankings, Cambrian placed 18th overall in Canada, its highest position to date and reached a new goal, with $5.56 million dollars in research income earned.

Committo says nationally, Cambrian also ranks third among medium-sized colleges for the number of paid student researchers, with 109.

Algoma And Manitoulin-Sudbury DSABS Receive Housing Funding

Two local area social administration boards are receiving funding to go towards new housing.

The Algoma District Social Administration Board is receiving just over $1-million dollars and its counterpart, the Manitoulin-Sudbury board, $1.2 million in funding.

The funding was announced during the 2022 Rural Ontario Municipal Association (ROMA) Conference this week.

Ontario is providing over $28 million to support 322 projects through the Municipal Modernization Program where municipalities can use the money to review local services, find efficiencies, including accelerating the creation of new housing and working with neighbouring municipalities to share services.

The allocation is a combination of the Canada-Ontario Housing Initiative and Social Services Relief Fund.

Need Medical Equipment, The Espanola Elks Are Here To Help

Buying medical equipment can be expensive, and to that end, an Espanola club does what it can with donated equipment to help those in need.

Espanola Elks Exalted Ruler Wanda Ouimette says the club has been providing medical equipment to the wider public for quite a few years as part of it giving back to the community initiative.

She says there is a wide range of equipment available for a small nominal fee ranging from canes to walkers to crutches, commodes to shower seats, wheelchairs and more, adding if anyone wishes to donate, they are welcome to do so.

Ouimette adds volunteer Stella Hunt has come on board to administer the program and the public is encouraged to call her with their medical equipment needs.

If you need equipment, call Stella at 780-499-7053.
